THE HOME OF THE BLIZZARD

Being the Story of the
Australasian Antarctic
Expedition 1911-1914

By Sir Douglas Mawson, D.Sc.

With over 300 Photographs, Eighteen Colour
Plates, Drawings, Maps, Plans, Diagrams, etc.
IN TWO VOLUMES. Crown 4to. 36s. net.

As a record of thrilling adventure, and splendid scientific achievement in the face of terrible conditions, this story will appeal to all readers. No narrative could be more enthralling than the explorer's account of his solitary sledge journey of 31 days through the blizzard-harassed Antarctic wastes, when death from starvation and exhaustion stared him in the face. The scenes of this and other extraordinary adventures are shown by many excellent illustrations, and a special feature are the direct colour photographs from Nature, the first ever taken, to show the dazzling and beautiful colouring of Antarctic scenery.

London: Athenaeum—"Its merits are so conspicuous that they constitute a challenge to public attention. No polar book ever written has surpassed these volumes, either in sustained interest or in the variety of the subject matter."

London: Morning Post: "The main thing that has impressed us in reading this book—one of the world's greatest stories of adventure, there is not a moment's doubt about this—is the sense that informs it all through of a dominating, triumphing will power. It is an intensely interesting and a fabulously true story. A strange, masterful book. We have sat down to it, meaning to read only a few chapters for a start; but its pages have drawn us on till far into the night. It is the best written account of Antarctic exploration we have ever read. The two stately volumes contain a wonderful wealth of illustrations, the most alluring of which are reproductions of crayon sketches and Paget colour photographs. Nobody who loves to hear of adventurous living should miss reading this."

Yorkshire Observer—"It is a simple, racy, good-humoured record, occasionally rising to a natural unforced eloquence, at times full of fun, not without tender touches of pathos, and it has its note of tragedy, too. Every Englishman ought to know the story in detail."

London: The British Weekly—"The account of Australian prowess should be read in every British home."

Scotsman—"It can be said that few narratives of polar research and discovery have contained a more engrossing record of achievement and endurance in the cause of knowledge, whilst none have been written in a more attractive style than the account of Australia's first essay to penetrate the mystery of the Antarctic."

The Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News—"We have seldom come across a volume of travel which has so closely rivetted the attention, or afforded more interest, and, it may be added, more amusement."

London: Sunday Times—"It is one of the most fascinating accounts of human effort and patience, of good fellowship and good humour, and of trials and triumphs, that even polar travel has ever inspired. Do not miss it on any account."

Boston: Transcript—"Not only a treasure-house of facts, but it is the most wonderfully illustrated book on polar exploration ever published."

New York: Literary Digest—"A thrilling record of adventure and achievement, and is exceptionally readable."

Philadelphia: Record—"There is not a page in the two volumes that does not possess something vital. There are thrills in the story that surpass any that fictionists can create."

Cleveland: Plain Dealer—"Probably the finest book of Antarctic experience ever published."

New York: Press—"The Mawson expedition was an Australian conception and an Australian victory."
